What if the choices we make for our health care were governed by the same rules that control the choices we make regarding the education of our children? How would we react to being told that our son or daughter couldn't be treated by a specialist who practiced a few blocks away, on the other side of an arbitrary "health care district" line? A new video explores this scenario and highlights the absurdity of restricting educational options for children by sending them to schools based on where they live rather than what they need.
